Men Who Swindle Hotels. The hotel men of America, says the Philadelphia Inquirer, who are yearly growing stronger in organization, are at present giving more than usual attention to the wrongs which the business has been made to suffer through the alleged inadequacy of the laws in nearly all the states for the protection of the business against the nefarious schemes of swindling travelers, A movement is now on foot, in which the Hotel Men's Association is interested looking to the appointment of a committee, whose duty it shall be to examine the laws applicable to the different states, and revise them for amendment by the several state legislatures. The following trick which was recently played on most of the prominent hostelries throughout the country by a trio of professional skins, was exposed by the detective alluded to. One traveled with a goodly-sized trunk of the finest and most fashionable character, and the other two had valises of different styles and evidently well filled. All of hese rogues were good clothes, but neither their dress nor manners corresponded sufficiently to afford the "cutest" clerk a clue to the fact that they were in any way con-nected one with another. One with a valise would walk briskly up to the hotel desk and, slamming his baggage down, register, be assigned a room, and order his baggage up stairs. It may be here necessary to state, explanatorily, that a "solid" looking "front," or, in more refined language, a gentlemanly or business-like appearance, is all that is requisite to secure a person with a valise a week's accomodation at a first-class hotel, those in charge, under such circumstances, seldom requiring the, at commoner places, customary "pay in advance." The man with a trunk would next put in an appearance and go through about the same right to sell the formalities, and lastly would come the other man with a valise. The order of going, however, would be somewhat changed. The traveler with a trunk would promptly make in Alexandria. All genuine goods are marked formalities, and lastly would come the other traveler with a trunk would promptly make his appearance at the end of the week and settle for his accommodation, state his intention of leaving, express entire satisfaction with the entertainment he had received, and his determination to patronize the place again when next he came to town, say "good-bye" to the clerk, shake hands pleasantly, and order the porters to bring this trunk down states in readings to the content of FIRST CLASS ARTICLES can sample them. his trunk down stairs in readiness to go to safely and snugly packed within the safe receptacle of their companion. To the clerk it is a puzzle how the pair of rascals got off with their valises, as they were probably seen to go out empty-handed.

The old dodge of pretending to have been robbed is fast becoming obsolete.

An original genius, who eked out a precarious existe ice by his wits, while stopping at a well-known hotel in Philadelphia, went to a good deal of trouble to get a good pair of boots for nothing, besides beating his stopa good deal of trouble to get a good pair of boots for nothing, besides beating his stopping place out of its just dues. He went to ping place out of its just dues. He went to a first-class shoe shop and ordered a pair of unavoidable accidents.

mh8 R. D. CATTS, Proprietor. the very finest articles that could be made, being very exact in his stipulations as to the material and style, and ordered them to he sent to his room at a certain time. Then he gave the same order in another store, except that the delivery was to be made half an hour later. The boy who brought the first pair was sent back to have the left boot stretched, and the boy who carried the second pair was sent back with the right one. The swindler then put on the remnants, for which he had not paid, and caught the next outbound train.

the depot, where he intended or not, as the case might be, to take the train for some other city, the hotel men of which it had been decided to "play." The other two (his companions) would never show up at the desk at all, for their luggage went out

Hotel keepers have lost considerable by cashing checks, and it is a pretty hard matter for anyone who has a draft for which he wants the money value to get accommodated at a hotel now. The "bogus advance agent" dodge was a favorite one with beats who possessed the qualifications to represent themselves as showmen. This game was generally played in small towns, and was worked in this way: The "agent," after deceiving the country newspaper into making an announcement of his presence in the village, would call on the hotel keeper, get his best terms, make a contract for twenty five people (himself included) for two days' board, probably three. This he would hand to the clerk, to be presented at the box office promptly at a special hour on the evening the show was to open. Should it appear practicable, the agent requested the landlord, in an off-hand way, for $10, as he was a "trifle short," and he would make the order call for $10 more. Of course the show never came along, as promised. Most companies are now so well known that the "bogus advance agent racket" is of little avail.
